Few People Have Eyes Alike.

Fully nine-tenths of those who wear Glasses have different vision in each eye. Sometimes it is a decided difference, in others only a slight variation. A careful examination will fail to bring out this defect—the same lenses will be adjusted to each eye—and headaches and eye strain that medicine fails to relieve is the result. I test each eye separately, select proper lenses, adjust glasses to suit both eyes from as complete a Test Case as is made.

No extra charge for testing the eyes. Gold Spectacles, $3.00 to $5.00. If you are having any trouble with your eyes or head call and see if I can't relieve you.

PARTING MOMENTS.

Three minutes! Aye, the fatal clock. With measured movement seems to knock My hopes and prayers, And the bottle I have not known; I feel my spirit sinking low.

Three minutes! With no power restrain The hand that counts them, and again my peace restore? I plead in vain; they will not stay; They pass, alas! away, away, Forevermore!

Three minutes, and the end will be! Yet I vainly look that face to see I now behold.

Good-by! What future time may bring Of pain, or joy, or anything, We cannot tell. We know that truth, at last, shall reign, And God will make his purpose known.

All be well.

—Baltimore American.

A Clever Little Woman.

The rain was dashing against the hospital window one morning in March when I made my rounds. I left Maria to the last, as I felt that on a dreary day like this she would be more than ever glad of a chat.

I had not sat beside her for five minutes before I found that she was in a highly-strung condition, her eyes were so bright, her skin dry, and her pulses quivering with their rapid beats.

After a few commonplace, I said: "What is it, Maria? What is the matter to-day? You have no new pain—no fresh trouble?"

"No, monsieur," she answered, "it is that I cannot still my thoughts—to-day is the anniversary—"

Her beautiful gray eyes were full of tears, and she was trying hard to exercise self-control.

"Tell me," I said, "all about the anniversary."

"It was 12 years ago to-day since I met my husband, Jean Louvain," she began eagerly, "and our meeting was a strange one indeed! I was in search of a clever forger—who had been believed to be a woman—and I had to go to Riviera in search of her. I had been in the Hospital of St. Jacques to see a man whom I thought could give me information, and it occurred to me suddenly that the dress of a Sister of Mercy would be a good disguise. I left Paris in time to reach Marseilles early one lovely morning, and going to the house of a friend I changed my clothes, and scarcely recognized myself in the great glass at the railway station."

No hair could be seen, and the large collar and winged cap gave me quite a different expression. I was dressed in smart but, exactly like those the sisters carry, to hold the things I needed, and I had my papers sewn inside a dress I wore. I was young, then, and the case that interested me occupied me so entirely that I became sleepless and suffered at times from sudden faintness, which would be succeeded by violent pains in my head. To alleviate these troubles I carried along a bottle of ether, and a day or two later, when both wrapped for safety in a square of jeweled cotton."

"Ah, I feel!" interrupted I. "Your former found them, and used them to stupefy you?"

"Pardon, monsieur," she returned, "my tale is better than that! At Marseilles I got into a rooming house where several people descended, and a man, who was his sole occupant, tried to prevent my entrance, as if unconsciously, but I looked sharply at him and got in. He then placed his arms on the doorway and blocked the window until the train left the station; then he threw himself on the floor and hid himself from me on the opposite side, and flung off the large cloak he was wearing."

"To my surprise and horror, I saw he was partly dressed as a woman, and he took from beneath the seat a bag like those in which workmen carry their tools and quickly continued his toilet. Naturally I watched him. He was small and slight, and very fair, and when he took off his coat, waistcoat, collar and tie, I saw a great scar beneath the left ear going right under his chin."

"I knew him instantly; he was Duret, the man whom I had seen in prison at Toulon, who was the most ingenious and cruel of a gang of thieves who had infested Paris for three years, and who had been cleverly released three months before. The captor had received 5,000 francs, and now he was at large again, and here before me in this narrow compartment. He stopped his toilet, and said to me, in the quiet, clear voice which I knew to be one of his characteristics:

"My sister, I am running for my life. My life is dear to me, and nothing shall stand in the way of my freedom—do you understand? Nothing! Nothing!"

"As he said this he took from his bag a large, sharp knife, such as shoemakers use, and laid it on the seat beside him. "Monsieur, how I felt. Thought I was quick, and my brain had traveled far in the few minutes of the journey. Here was Duret; if only I could capture him—the reward would make my life a hell of a thing. I stopped him. I would try, I would think; I would not shrink into my corner at his words and trembled, and he felt the tears fill my eyes as I looked up appealingly at him."

"Fear not, dear sister," he said mockingly; "if you do as I say, you have nothing to dread. I shall quit the train at Toulon, and you must talk to me as if I were coming home to my family, and you had made acquaintance with me all day."

"Of course I promised, and he went on arranging himself. His hair was short, and he put on a black woman's wig and carried in his ears; he had a shirt twisted around at his waist, and this he let down, then he made me fasten a white necktie, and he put on a hood, which I had tied in my ears; he was thinking, monsieur! My hands trembled with excitement, for the train was rushing on, and I was barely one hour from Marseilles and Toulon. He talked—I suppose he was glad to speak again after his solitary imprisonment—he reassured me as he said he would not harm me if I obeyed him, and he made me vow on the cross that I would say no word till he was out of sight."

"And I shall watch your train away, my sister," he said, "and I went back to my seat, and then I laughed. He looked furious, and asked why I was such a fool. I said his face was a fair woman's, and his hair a dark one's, and he would be noticed directly. He scowled at me, and said:

FACTS ABOUT HAWAII.

Resources and Population of the Little Island Republic.

Before Long the Fertile Country Will Be a Part of the American Union—Japan's Diplomatic Protest.

(Special Letter.)

Inasmuch as the foreign affairs committee of the United States senate has reported favorably the proposed treaty of annexation between the Hawaiian republic and the United States a brief chat about our future "ocean territory" cannot be out of place.

Although the area of the eight islands composing the republic of Hawaii is smaller than that of the state of Massachusetts, the country, on account of its remarkable fertility and even temperature, is capable of wonderful development. The highest temperature recorded on the islands in 12 years is 89 degrees Fahrenheit, and the lowest 54.

Some one has said that Hawaii is a veritable fountain of youth for pulmonary sufferers—and as soon as the stars and stripes have been hoisted officially over the government house at Honolulu there will doubtless be a wonderful exodus of consumptives and asthmatics from every state of the union, who will seek relief among the mountains and in the groves of the new territory.

The eight islands, which are only partially under cultivation, have an area of 6,740 miles, divided as follows: Niihau, 275; Kauai, 599; Oahu, 600; Molokai, 270; Maui, 760; Lanai, 150; Kahoolawe, 63, and Hawaii, 4,210. Honolulu, the capital of the republic, is showing a population of 15,000.

"I took it, and pretended to tremble as I touched his forehead," he exclaimed, and then he said to me: "Take this brush and paint me."

"Fool!" he shrieked, "I will not hurt you—see how the train rushes—lose no time!"

"Monsieur," I replied; "you must do as I tell you, then. I caught up his cloak and put it around him, as a barber puts his cloth, and, telling him to shut his eyes, I began to paint the lids. The next moment I transferred the brush to my left hand, and with my right I took out the stopper from the chloroform bottle, and poured half the contents on the wadding that had been around it. Happily, it was a good piece, and dropping the brush, I pressed it suddenly over his nose and mouth, and saturated it with the ether."

"The suddenness of the action took him some time to get over, and he was quite quiet," he exclaimed, and then he said to me: "Take this brush and paint me."

"I had no knowledge of the action of anæsthetics, and now a dread possessed me. I had killed him, and I was having heart-somerset that might people of good brains were specially susceptible of such influences, and I thought perhaps I should only take a dead body into Toulon."

"He looked so ghastly with the streaks of paint on his livid skin. I placed my hand on his heart, and for a moment most thankful was I to find a pulsation. Then I seated myself on the floor, keeping my eyes on his face, and I poured in my lap the bottle of chloroform to pour on the pad if I felt his pulses quicken too much."

"I was trying to try, trying, trying, but never another to match this. I am not cruel by nature, and sitting there during the quarter of an hour of the chloroform, I was almost driven to despair. I could have acted as I did—it seemed as if I could not be Maria Leclerc."

"At length the train slackened, and then I drew the platform for examination tickets. Two guards opened the door, and I jumped up and rushed from the carriage; and in my excitement, I shrieked: 'Duret! Duret!'

"What of Duret?" exclaimed a tall man, who advanced from the carriage behind.

"He is there—it is he!" I said, and I pointed to the man who was sitting in the room of the superior guard. I found the chief of the station, some policemen and the tall man standing around me."

"This is Jean Louvain, warder of the prison at Toulon, said the superintendent. 'Duret escaped from him yesterday, and he was clever enough to escape from the prison at Toulon, and he did not look for him dressed as a woman.'"

"Nor did I expect to find him caught by a woman," he remarked. I went on to say that I had met him in my husband, and that was how I met my husband."—N. Y. Weekly.

Early Pleas.

Dependence on superstitious is one kind of helplessness. In one of his neighborly chats with a lady who lived near him at Sunnyside, Washington Irving gently reproved her complaint about the demands her maid made upon her. "I have to teach her many things," she said. "Too many, perhaps," replied Irving. "Begin with one thing. Teach them to be easily pleased."

A Modified Order.

Cowboy (striding into the Round-Up saloon)—Gimme a drink, an' be quick about it if ye know what's good fer ye. I ain't goin' ter pay for it, nuther.

Experienced Bartender (steudly covering him with a revolver)—What'll ye have?

Cowboy (blanching)—Water. I s'pose the only drink that's free.—N. Y. Weekly.

An Incurable Case.

Physician—Insomnia? How do you know?

Con Visal-Why, every time I come home at two or three o'clock in the morning I always find her wide awake!—Tit-Bits.

No Excuse at All.

"They quarrel all the time. How on earth did such a pair ever come to marry?"

"Don't know—no money on either side."—Chicago Journal.

Already Perfect.

Dobbs—You can't make a monkey of me!

Hobbs—Of course not; I have your word for it that you're self-made.—Town Topics.

Exhortation.

Oh—be merry—yes, be merry. Blue your joy in your dress; For, no matter what your worries, They will never be more than a dream.—Louisville Courier-Journal.
